

ABSTRACT

A process for incorporating an additive into a polymer that comprises the step of melt blending the additive and the polymer at a temperature that is less than the lowest temperature of the conventional melt temperature range of the polymer. Also, a product made from such a process, in which the additive is a nanoclay, or is susceptible to thermal degradation at temperatures that would normally be employed to process the polymer.